Richard D. Heideman stated "It is beyond dispute that the Holocaust was a genocide; indeed, it is the most heinous and well-documented genocide in human history, rightly condemned as such and acknowledged for its gravity and scale by Congress and scholars throughout the world. The United States has an interest in post-Holocaust justice recognizing and seeking to hold accountable those who have destroyed lives and taken properties without proper compensation the Holocaust. When foreign regimes sponsor the intentional, targeted mass murder of innocent people, the American people and families of those who are harmed must have a means of redress, justice and accountability in US federal court."

These cases will be argued before the Supreme Court on December 7th.
